contributions from the first european symposium on empirical research into suicidal behavior held march 19 22 1986 in munich initiated by arbeitsgemeinschaft zur erforschung suizidalen verhaltens with deutsche gesellschaft fürselbstmordverhütung an innovative and long overdue book by the world's leading researchers and practitioners describing what really works in suicide prevention the evidence for particular approaches where the gaps are in our knowledge and how we can fill them suicide rat globally suicides account for a significant number of premature deaths every year traditional approaches to suicide research and prevention are not working for everyone but why is this and what can be done about it in critical suicidology a team of international scholars practitioners and people directly affected by suicide argue that the field of suicidology has become too focused on the biomedical paradigm a model that pathologizes distress and obscures the social political and historical contexts that contribute to human suffering the authors introduce the perspectives of those who have direct personal knowledge of suicide and suicidal behaviour and propose alternative approaches to suicide prevention that are creative socially just and culturally responsive in the right hands this book could save lives currently in the western world suicide is a conscious act of self induced annihilation best understood as a multidimensional malaise in a needful individual who defines an issue for which suicide is perceived as the best solution to understand this self induced annihilation one should also understand violence part ii presents four chapters an explication of violence and its legacy the role of trauma and violence in subsequent suicidal behavior homicide with specific reference to elderly anglo females and terrorism and hostage taking the very person who takes his her life may be least aware of the psychological reasons for doing so part iii consists of a study of unconscious processes in suicide and an explication of the confusions of the body self and others in suicidal states in recent years a great deal of interest has been focused on suicide in the elderly and in the young however in line with modern trends in psychology sociology psychiatry anthropology and other human health fields interest has now shifted to suicide across the life span from childhood through adulthood to old age this book has been conceptualized within this developing tradition there are various ways in which life's timelines can be conceptualized developmental theory we believe should be open ended this has widened and will continue to widen our understanding of many complicated human acts including suicide though suicide is in many ways the same across the entire life span understanding the time lines in the suicidal process is imperative to do so however is we believe challenging in this volume we attempt to engage in the process of understanding suicide from a developmental perspective to do this we have been fortunate to obtain the cooperation of a highly competent group of contributors one interesting footnote to our list of authorities is that they represent suicidologists from across the life span a few who are at the beginning of their careers a large number in their middle years and a few who are in the indian summer of their professional lives in many countries of the world the number of persons that commit or attempt suicide has risen considerably over the past two decades particularly among young people suicide rates have increased dramatically suicide now ranking as the second or third cause of death among them the causes of this development have been questioned by health care workers scientists and policy makers although much still remains unknown it has become increasingly clear that one way in which a society affects the probability that an individual will die by his or her own hand is through the attitudes it adopts towards suicide modern society confronts people more and more often with attitudes and models such as in the mass media that express a permissive stance towards voluntary death in a variety of circumstances evidence suggest that imitation might indeed play a significant role in the frequency of suicide a related aspect is the attitudes care givers entertain themselves towards suicide this affects both the way in which they approach and treat individuals in suicidal crisis as well as the readiness of these individuals to look for professional help the present volume presents an overview of important recent work on the influences of societal and care givers attitudes on suicide as well provoking premature suicidal deaths periodically researchers express concern about the research conducted on suicide back in 1966 merton kahne criticized the quality of the research but more recently some scholars have declared that we have reached our limits in understanding and predicting suicide dan reidenberg recently wrote an editorial entitled healthy debate frustration or a field in chaos in which he discussed the failure in the united states to reduce the suicide rate which in recent years has been rising cas soper has argued that there is no empirical reason to believe that predictors of suicide exist there is no theoretical foundation for believing that risk factors exist and there is evidence that suicide may be predictably unpredictable david lester reviews and discusses these views in the end of suicidology can we ever understand suicide he reviews some recent efforts to stimulate the field of suicidology and finds these attempts lacking in the major section of the book lester presents some recent provocative ideas on suicide that have not hitherto received much attention such as brian mishara s two component model of suicide with life and suicide tendencies and david lester and steven stack s proposal that suicide may be viewed as a drama staged by the prospective suicide might these provocative ideas and others stimulate the field presenting cases recounted in the patients own words that reveal the inner workings of the suicidal mind shneidman looks at suicide from a psychological perspective he offers a wealth of insights to help understand and to prevent suicide approximately 1 million people commit suicide world wide annually and around 10 million attempt suicide each year suicide is a major public health problem throughout the world and major efforts are currently being made to help reduce these numbers however suicide is the result of complex interactions between a range of factors including historical psychological cultural biological and social and any approach to treating the problem of suicide has to consider all these factors this new edition of the oxford textbook of suicidology and suicide prevention has been thoroughly updated and expanded since publication of the first edition in 2009 this comprehensive resource covers all aspects of suicidal behaviour and suicide prevention from a number of different perspectives including its underlying religious and cultural factors its political social and economic causes its psychiatric and somatic determinants and its public health impacts the new edition includes several new clinically focussed chapters devoted to major psychiatric disorders and their relation to suicide including mood and anxiety disorders substance abuse psychosis schizophrenia bipolar disorder eating disorders and personality disorders it also includes a fully updated section on psychometric scales used for measuring suicidal behaviour and instruments used in suicide preventative interventions part of the authoritative oxford textbooks in psychiatry series this second edition will continue to serve as the key reference source for both researchers and professionals working in the areas of suicidology and suicide prevention including psychiatrists clinical psychologists public health specialists and neuroscientists this essential reference volume in the field of suicidology brings forth leading edge conceptualizations of suicidal behaviour by including emerging trends and recent research advances in the field across the globe it highlights the trajectories of suicidal behaviour emphasizing the psyche behind attempting suicide identifying vulnerable groups and bridging the gap between theoretical underpinnings and application for addressing the aftermath of suicide the handbook delineates research progress on risk assessment among vulnerable groups of varied milieu furthermore it introduces various avenues of change and well being it also addresses important concerns related to terrorism and suicide in the armed forces this handbook is a comprehensive repository of the latest research synergized with theoretical conceptualizations that pave the way for newer approaches towards management and prevention of suicidal behaviour it includes contributions by eminent authors across the globe and is a must have resource for scholars academics and professionals in the areas of mental health and social work this book will help the reader to understand the suicidal mind from a phenomenological point of view shedding light on the feelings of suicidal individuals and also those of clinicians in accordance with the importance that the phenomenological approach attaches to subjectivity and sense of self as the starting points for knowledge emphasis is placed on the need for the clinician to focus on the subjective experiences of the at risk individual to set aside prior assumptions judgments or interpretations and to identify ways of bridging gaps in communication associated with negative emotions the vital importance of empathy is stressed drawing attention to the insights offered by neuroimaging studies and the role of mirror neurons in social cognition it is widely acknowledged that when a clinician meets a person who wants to die by suicide the clinician does not fully understand what is going on inside the mind of that individual this book recognizes that any approach to suicide prevention must promote understanding of suicidal thoughts and feelings the awareness that it fosters and the innovative perspectives that it presents will appeal to a wide readership what is suicide when does suicide start and when does it end who is involved examining narratives of suicide through a discourse analytic framework discursive constructions of the suicidal process demonstrates how linguistic theories and methodologies can help answer these questions and cast light upon what suicide involves and means both for those who commit an act and their loved ones engaging in close analysis of suicide letters written before the act and post hoc narratives from after the event this book is the first qualitative study to view suicide not as a single event outside time but as a time extended process exploring how suicide is experienced and narrated from two temporal perspectives dariusz galasinski and justyna ziolkowska introduce discourse analysis to the field of suicidology arguing that studying suicide narratives and the reality they represent can add significantly to our understanding of the process and in particular its experiences and meanings discursive constructions of the suicidal process demonstrates the value of discourse analytic insights in informing enriching and contextualising our knowledge of suicide edwin s shneidman is recognized as the central figure in the field of suicidology his writings have taught countless psychologists and other health professionals about the complexity of suicide death and bereavement this collection of his writings spans the entirety of his career and offers a unique insight into the development of his thinking the material is broken down into five parts psychological assessment logic melville and murray suicide and death and each section includes an introduction by the editor lives and deaths is a vital resource for those in suicidology and related fields allowing the reader to sample a variety of selections from shneidman s work in one compact volume the book is ideal for classroom use by upper level undergraduates and graduate students in the history of suicidology or as a supplemental text in a general suicidology course it is also of interest to clinicians treating high risk patients as well as a more general audience including psychologists social workers crisis counselors and suicide prevention specialists this book explores suicide prevention perspectives from around the world considering both professionals points of view as well as first person accounts from suicidal individuals scholars around the globe have puzzled over what makes a person suicidal and what is in the minds of those individuals who die by suicide most often the focus is not on the motives for suicide nor on the phenomenology of this act but on what is found from small cohorts of suicidal individuals this book offers a tentative synthesis of a complex phenomenon and sheds some light on models of suicide that are less frequently encountered in the literature written by international experts it makes a valuable contribution to the field of suicidology that appeals to a wide readership from mental health professionals to researchers in suicidology and students
